Amendment #002

This Amendment is being issued to respond to a question.

Question #002: In reference to section 7.1.2 sub section 3, I have the following question regarding Names of Qualified Employees.

There is a table that requests the names of the qualified technicians who will be working on the equipment.

Of the five types of technicians, why does it not request the name of a generator technician or EGSA certified technician? Instead it requests a diesel engine technician when this type of certification and training involves only highway tractor and field tractor engine maintenance and repairs and does not include generator repair and maintenance training.

Answer #002: Ontario does not have a recognized certification that is specifically related to or exactly dedicated to Generator Systems.

The Diesel Engine Mechanic certification is acceptable when the Generator System has a diesel engine as the prime mover. A diesel engine is the same regardless of its use. We also require as part of the qualification the related experience and or training specifically on Generator Systems.

PWGSC has reviewed the EGSA course and have found it to be acceptable as appropriate training but not as the sole qualifier for this work. The only other possible acceptable qualifier would be specific OEM training and certification.

ALL OTHER TERMS AND CONDITIONS REMAIN UNCHANGED.
