Types and Functions of Health Facilities Funded Through Health Canada's First Nations and Inuit Health Branch Health Facilities and Capital Program

Nursing Stations A nursing station is a field unit typically located in an isolated/remote community. These health facilities normally house field unit staff of two or more community health nurses and other support and primary health care staff organized to carry out primary health care services including urgent care, short-term in-patient holding capacity, and public/community health. Access for urgent health needs is available on a 24-hour basis. Physician services and dental services are provided on a visiting basis.

Health Centres A health centre is a field unit staffed by one or more community health nurses and support personnel to carry out disease prevention and health promotion activities in the community. A health centre with treatment also offers limited out-patient treatment services and limited emergency services. Services for primary/urgent care are provided by physicians residing in the area or on a visiting basis. A health centre is normally located in non-isolated and semi-isolated communities.

Health Stations A health station is a field unit in a small building or trailer in an isolated or semi-isolated community. A health station houses field unit staff consisting of community health nurse(s) and other health care support staff to carry out disease prevention and health promotion activities in the community. A health station may include primary care services for urgent health needs of the community which are available on weekdays only and not on a 24-hour basis. Physician services and dental services are provided on a visiting basis.

Health Offices A health office is a facility that supports the work of Community Health Representatives, visiting Community Health Nurses, and other transient health care providers.

Treatment Centres A treatment centre is a health facility designed to support the National Native Alcohol and Drug Abuse Program (NNADAP) and the National Youth Solvent Abuse Program. Services provided can include intake screening, detoxification, follow-up/after-care, individual and group counseling, crisis intervention, and/or outpatient services.

Residences

Residences are housing units designed to accommodate nursing staff (and immediate family, if necessary) that are only provided in communities where there is no public housing market or where it is necessary to have the staff reside near their place of work. These units can take the form of one/two/three-bedroom homes, duplexes, triplexes, and so on.
