National Strategy on Wrecked and Abandoned Vessels

As you may know, wrecked, abandoned, dilapidated and hazardous vessels (collectively referred to as vessels of concern) can pose risks to the environment, public health and safety, local interests such as fishing and tourism, and also culturally-sensitive areas.

Unfortunately, the cost of retrieving and disposing of these vessels, especially sunken ones, often exceed their salvage value. As a result, some owners will simply abandon their vessels once they are no longer seaworthy, which becomes an issue for the local community and taxpayers to address.

The Oceans Protection Plan is the largest investment ever made to protect Canada's coasts and waterways. Initiatives under this Plan are making marine shipping and transportation safer, restoring the health of marine ecosystems, and focussed on creating new partnerships opportunities for Indigenous and coastal communities.

The National Strategy on Wrecked and Abandoned Vessels, as part of the Oceans Protection Plan, would prevent the occurrence of new vessels of concern and address the vessels of concern that already exist in Canadian waters.

As part of the National Strategy, the Canadian Coast Guard is developing a national inventory of vessels of concern and a risk-based strategy to prioritize how we address them. Coast Guard is anticipating on engaging interested Indigenous partners, coastal communities, and industry stakeholders over Spring 2019. As such, Coast Guard will be presenting and soliciting feedback at:

National Canadian Marine Advisory Council (CMAC) in Ottawa on April 16, 2019 between 3:00pm to 5:00pm during the Canadian Coast Guard Working Group session.
