Here are the questions which we have received until now:

QUESTION-8

Annex A, Backcountry skis, point 6.1.2 Must have a wood core with air channels.
Could you help explain it, the location of air channel which part on skis?

ANSWER-8

The wood core is common for Backcountry skis, but we want a wood core with air channels.

The major difference between the two types of manufacturing is the weight. The weight of the ski has a significant influence on the performance of the skier during a long hike.

- a. Our need is one of performance and efficiency.
- b. The air channels are inside the entire length of the ski.
